

Housing

In the average lifetime, a person spends 65% of their time inside their home. Harvard scholars are studying how to improve and evolve this critical part of our lives.

The first homes for early humans

Rockshelters for the first Homo sapiens in Europe contained decorated walls, hearth-like structures, and other features that still make up our homes.

